BAD CARTRIDGES SAVE POLICEMAN

Negro Snaps Revolver Four Times at Patrolman Thomas Morrissey.

Ted Robinson, a negro employed by M. A. Cleary at a saloon beneath the East St. Louis viaduct, snapped a big revolver four times at Patrolman Thomas Morrissey yesterday afternoon. It is charged. Four cartridges in the revolver bear the imprints of the trigger, and through some unexplained reason failed to explode. Morrissey thinks that the negro pointed the revolver directly at him when he pulled the trigger. Robinson will have to answer to a charge of assault with intent to kill.

Policeman Morrissey was attracted to the sound by a light. As he entered it Robinson drew his revolver. It is alleged, "that on the spur of the moment" the policeman for answer the negro began pulling the trigger. Morrissey reports. Four times the trigger was pulled and each time the policeman got closer to the negro. Finally he gave him a clout on the head with his fist, and Robinson fell to the ground. Drawing his own revolver, the policeman commanded Robinson to get up and to hold up his hands. A search revealed no other weapon, and picking up the revolver, Policeman A. B. Davis escorted the negro to the police station. There the weapon was examined and the four cartridges, with the percussion caps intended were found in the revolver.

Robinson admitted pulling the trigger four times at the policeman, but did not explain his reasons for trying to shoot.
